◆ Executive Director: Debra R. Hemmert

◆ Chairman of the Board: Elmer Martinez

“SEICAA is dedicated to providing opportunity and for individuals and communities to thrive and reach their fullest potential, promoting self-sufficiency and greater economic independence through services, education, affordable housing, and training.”

Retraction from Summer 2008 issue:

SEICAA inadvertently said “SEICAA teaches Finally Home! Homebuyer’s Education to participants in the Mutual Self-Help and Acquisition Housing Programs..” Finally Home is a Proprietary Program and SEICAA does not claim ownership and apologizes for any confusion this oversight caused.

SEICAA is pleased to announce the tri-part Homebuyer Essential Training Program. Through contact with community organizations and SEICAA participants, the Agency realized the need to expand the existing Money Management Financial Fitness and one-on-one credit counseling services. SEICAA’s Executive Director and staff met and outlined the expansion of literacy education courses offered by SEICAA.

The financial management and Homebuyer’s Education classes help low-income individuals realize the dream of homeownership and teach valuable skills on how to budget, save for emergencies, monitor credit health, and watch for identity theft. Moving low-income individuals out of poverty and helping them reach a self-reliant life is a cornerstone of the agency. Financial management classes gives participants the knowledge they need to accumulate emergency savings, develop assets, and become fully self-reliant.

The third training component is Post-purchase Education integrated with Foreclosure Prevention. Post-purchase education reinforces information first introduced in Homebuyer’s Education and expands to include information on how to protect homebuyer’s investment through proper budgeting; maintaining the home; and financial health maintenance, including tips on avoiding predatory lending pitfalls and monitoring for identity fraud.

SEICAA will be on the front lines of organizations prepared to assist in combating the foreclosure epidemic. Staff are nationally certified through NeighborWorks to instruct Homebuyers Education, as well as Post-purchase Education with Foreclosure Prevention.

The impacts of foreclosure prevention classes in the community are evident. A 2005 study found that “One foreclosure can result in as much as an additional $220,000 in reduced property value and home equity for nearby homes” (William C. Appgar and Mark Duda, Collateral Damage: The Municipal Impact of Today’s Mortgage Foreclosure Boom, p. 4). This one study demonstrates the impact of foreclosure on a neighborhood and a community at large. SEICAA assists in the maintenance of homeownership and does so before a family enters into a crisis situation.

SEICAA is dedicated to help families lift themselves out of poverty and achieve economic independence. Assisting families to achieve self-sufficiency, aided through homeownership asset development, is SEICAA’s ultimate goal.

SEICAA requires all participants in Mutual Self-Help and Acquisition Housing Programs to complete Homebuyers Education and Post-purchase Education, integrated with Foreclosure Prevention.

SEICAA’s Homebuyers Essentials is sponsored by Bank of America and Key Bank. If you would like more information about Homebuyer Essentials Training, or need assistance due to Foreclosure, please call Merriann Forrest at 232-1114 x 109, or mforrest@seicaa.org.

Executive Director Insight

Debra R. Hemmert,

SEICAA Executive Director

Ms. Hemmert received a nomination for the Idaho State Journal Business Person of the Year; she was a finalist in the Government/Non-profit Sector. Congratulations!

WHEN WORKING HARD JUST ISN'T ENOUGH

The wage gap between high and low income families continues to grow. In the Northwest, people struggle to find work that pays a livable wage. A living wage is the amount that is needed for a household to meet their basic needs. This increasing wage gap means that for many individuals and families, hard work just isn't enough.

A living wage in Idaho equates to a single adult, without children, making $10.93 per hour and two adults (both working) with two children making a combined hourly wage of $30.05 to meet basic needs.

The majority of families SEICAA programs assist certainly do not make a livable wage. Most are working individuals or families who go to work every day to provide financially for their families; however, even with two adults in the household working full time at $7.50 per hour their combined household income is not enough for basic needs. This population also faces a gap left between the need for livable wage employment and the availability of jobs that pay enough to maintain a basic standard of living.

Job seekers and workers are further challenged by a disturbing trend: that the cost of basic necessities is increasing faster than wages. Driven by rapidly rising health care costs, the living wage is fast outpacing actual wage growth, leaving paychecks increasingly unable to cover a basic standard of living. Recent data indicates that even if a worker received a livable wage five years ago, by now even an inflation adjusted wage would leave the worker unable to meet some basic needs.¹

Based on these facts it is no surprise that SEICAA's programs have seen a steady increase in requests for additional assistance. SEICAA provided a record number of households one time Energy Assistance payments from November 2007-April 2008. Client tracking data shows that households seeking a variety of emergency assistance have risen 8.2 % since July 1, 2008. Food Box requests are showing the same increase in numbers during the same time frame. Participants enrolled in the Family Development Program are also at an all time high. These are families who go to work every day, sometimes working several part time jobs to provide for their families.

When "working poor" families will be able to realize the "living wage" dream is anybody's best guess. One thing is certain, it isn't because they "just don't work hard enough," as some would say. Until the day comes when individuals can "work hard" and receive "hard work pay" SEICAA will continue to be the voice of concern for livable wages, affordable housing, and health care, along with ensuring southeastern Idaho families, no matter what their economic status, be able to meet their basic needs.

SEICAA Receives Grant from Key Foundation

In July 2008, SEICAA submitted a request to the Key Foundation for support of SEICAA's Financial Literacy Programs, including Homebuyer Education and Post-purchase Education integrated with Foreclosure Prevention.
